

CDP Wins Two Livable City Awards

CDP was honored to be selected for the top prize in the 2006 Livable City Awards organized by the City of London. We won the category for responsible investment, and the overall prize. Simon Mills, the City of London's Environmental Coordinator said: "The standard of applicants this year was higher than ever and the diversity of applicants reflected the different approaches companies can take. Our overall winner - the Carbon Disclosure Project - is a shining example of the type of innovation that has consolidated the City of London's position as the world centre for climate change-related services and products."

Last year we were the runner up so it is a great achievement to win this year against some stiff competition. The full press release can be seen on the CDP News page on the new website: www.cdproject.net
